Felicia Latson

Felicia Latson, LCSW-S is a passionate advocate for change for marginalized communities. She earned her undergraduate degree from Stephen F. Austin State University, and attended University of Houston for her graduate studies in Social Work. As a returned Peace Corps Volunteer and a resident of Houston's Historic Fifth Ward, she is most inspired by the community activists who initiate change using the tools available to them. Latson's own ethos is grounded in relationship building – she doesn't see equitable change as a top-down bureaucratic process. She is able to foster change by giving the resources of a community a platform to excel. Latson currently practices administrative and clinical social work at Legacy Community Health as the Director of Programs for Social Determinants of Health.
